While Grace might come of with a new approach from time to time this is far, far outweighed by her complete lack of resource management and time management. Despite repeated requests to consider alternative approaches or prioritize certain projects less given low impact and value she disregards this. Example 1: Asking the management team over and over again for metrics she has been repeatedly told we cannot get given lack of data Example 2: Having a Sr. Manager go through hundreds of invoices to manually track maintenance inventory is a poor use of that individual's time when we have three interns and an entire maintenance department Example 3: Repeatedly asking the same questions over and over again on ITE, completion factor, block hour reliability, etc. when these have been answered, most cases purposely in writing so she can refer back to that for reference Please stop and think about the following: Does this need to be done now Is this the right resource for this request Will this actually drive value Is this even possible given the current constraints in place

Grace actively identifies issues and engages in dialogue with relevant stakeholders to identify solutions.

Grace does a good job of knowing when to let her teams run with projects and when she needs to help out and provide insight

Instructions and communication to the team is often very disjointed and irregular when it comes to changes. If you know something is coming at least lay some groundwork start clearing priorities and getting the team ready. When changes happen rapidly that's when communication and clear directions are needed the most. Often in meetings Grace just starts going through really detailed questions and doesn't give the team any context as to why this is being asked, what it's being used for, etc. and forces them to have to piece together next steps from context clues. I have received dozens of emails with just one random question or instruction that out of context just leaves the team confused and frustrated: Hi All, When you put together the list, please make sure the total tie or at least are close to the GL. Thanks. Best, Grace Totals of what tie? The meeting before this was so chaotic and we didn't get clear instructions or document steps in any way. Where are we consolidating lists to ensure these tie to captions since this was divvied up to various managers? Emails like this do not provide any value and just frustrate the team. Hi All, Please add any variance ($ > 250K) vs. 0+12 to the tracker below. Thanks.

Z:\New_Finance\F9 Budget\2020\3-3+9\[Forecast Variance Tracker.xlsx]Tracker Best, Grace Variances of what? Actuals? The next forecast? Is that monthly? Quarterly? Annually? Variance on an account? Caption? There was no context or meeting before this and was sent to the entire department. Hi all, Please stop making changes to 0+12. Thanks. Best, Grace To costs? The deck? Why should they stop? What's going on? If you give the team instructions give them context as well.

When in meetings with Grace and other teams or vendors I often feel like I have to constantly course correct her to keep her on track of with the goal of the meeting and remind her to do certain things she's been asked to do by others. She often gets side tracked by items she thinks are higher priority despite others (including her boss) telling her to de-prioritize. This makes it very hard to collaborate with her given she only seems to want to work on her goals and not the companies. She disregards task assigned to her and just gives them to someone else when she doesn't want to do them. Example: She was told to take ownership repeatedly on a project that her VP explicitly ask her to lead. When he left the room she immediately told the managers to lead instead. I also often feel like she is not paying attention given I have asked her questions and have had to repeat her name once or twice to get her attention. It's ok to multi-task if needed, but be sure to not get completely caught up in something else that you are not paying attention to the meeting. If you need to work on something else then request a meeting is rescheduled or have someone else attend in your stead. Example: This happened once in a meeting with only her and one person. We spent the first 20 minutes going through in detail a particular subject to address a question that Grace specifically had asked. After 20 minutes she looked up and asked the same question and was confused why we weren't talking about that. We then had to repeat the exact same conversation for her. Despite this she still asked the same question several times over the next few days as if we never had talked about it. It honestly feels disrespectful and makes be worried to ever trust her to collaborate with others without supervision. The integrity of the team and it's members is dependent on it's leaders and I don't trust her to represent this team.

I think it might be beneficial for Grace to strengthen relationships with her colleagues outside of FP&A. I think it will help her communication with others, which at times feels awkward and creates unnecessary strain partially driven by limited communication and unawareness of other teams timing, initiatives, and workload etc.

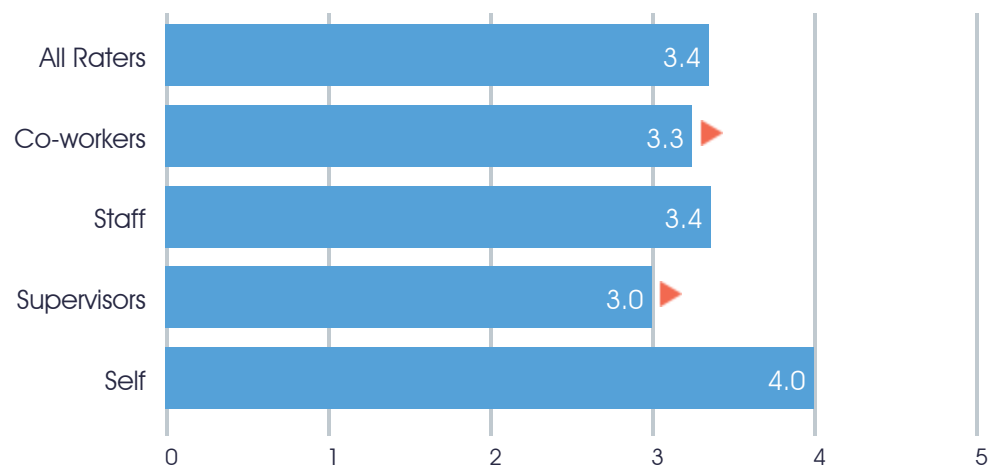

► COMPETENCY: SELF-DEVELOPMENT

Self-Development encompasses identification of weaknesses and positive action to overcome identified weaknesses, continuing to build one's strengths, being self-aware of actions and how they impact others, transferring formal and informal training/development back to one's daily job, and mastering all aspects of management (e.g., finance), not just functional expertise (e.g., clinic)

Limited visibility into this function

I know that Grace has an active interest in her team and is mindful of ways to help individuals grow their career to continue succeeding.

Clearly from the answers of the last two questions she is not aware of how her actions impact others despite people directly telling her "this is a bad idea." We have plenty of good resources to learn from both on the team and in the company from a leadership as well as just general analytical standpoint. I would like to see Grace reach out and ask for recommendations or at a minimum try to at least consider recommendations of others. Don't disregard everything out of hand just because someone else recommended it.

► COMPETENCY: BUSINESS MINDSET

Business Mindset encompasses having a clear and complete focus on the entire operation as a sustainable/growing business, seeing and implementing the entire vision of the company, inclusive of internal and external stakeholders, and linking departmental operations to all business indicators (i.e., labor costs, patient satisfaction, quality), and how departmental metrics truly impact the entire business.

Provides a unique & fresh perspective to assess the business needs

Grace has struggled to get caught up on many airline concepts or understand the state of the business and its resources. She is good about asking questions but it would be good for her to take some notes or try to do some digging on her own before asking the same question multiple times. A learning curve is expected, but Grace is a little behind where I would expect her to be given her role and responsibility. Example: What is a controllable cancellation? what is block reliability? can we get mechanic hours? Most of these have been explained ad nauseam. Write down the definition or take some notes and think about it before you ask again.

Grace has a good understanding of the business and how various initiatives impact company performance and outcomes. Grace is flexible to deal with the everchanging needs of the business.

Grace's long term focus and eliminate temporary/unnecessary obstacles are her strengths. She properly identifies others who have the ability to develop into more effective contributors not only in the short term, but also in the long run. Effectively, she provides stability.

Encourages team to set goals and develop new skill sets. Supportive of team members completing training outside of standard job

Despite having an hour+ long team meeting on what we could do better where one of the key items brought up was delegating tasks to the analysts she still insists task are done by managers. This is both a poor use of resources, but more importantly deprives the team of a valuable learning and career developing opportunity.

► COMPETENCY:

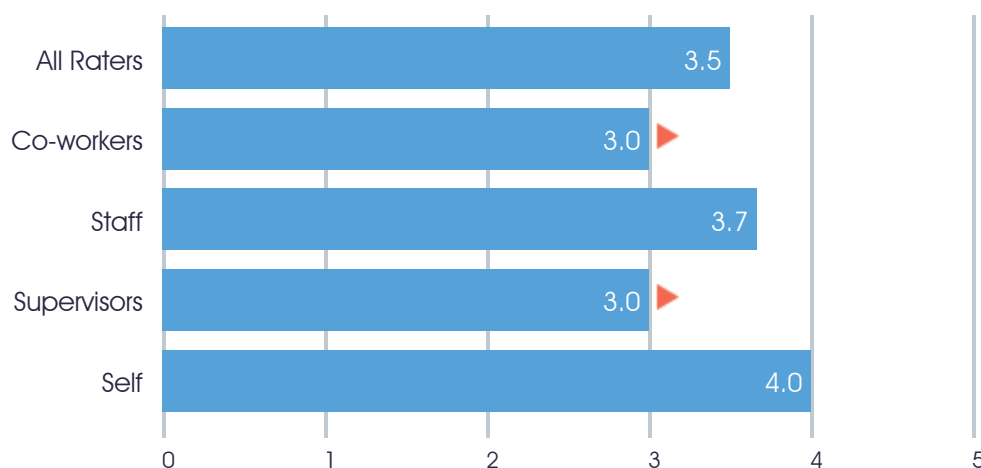

CUSTOMER FOCUS

Customer Focus encompasses anticipating, communicating, and addressing current & emerging customer needs; actively listening to customers' needs, goals, and expectations; developing, reinforcing and strengthening customer service culture; adjusting priorities to meet multiple and often competing customers demands, seeks and incorporates feedback from customers to improve performance, and follows up with customers to insure needs have been met satisfactory. Overall I think Grace does a decent job of addressing requests from the operating groups or executives. However she could use some work on identifying what projects are truly high priority or achievable so to not overwhelm the team with unrealistic or overlapping priorities. Part of being in a leadership role is shielding those who report to you. Manage both up as well as down. Before you say yes think about: Is it achievable with the resources and information we have? Can this wait/is it really urgent? Does it need to happen at all? Can we simplify the request? Do we already have something similar that we could reuse?

Generally Grace is a clear communicator and can engage in meaningful and productive dialogue with others. Grace should consider communication that is more personal and at limited times, more polite.

► COMPETENCY: COMMUNICATION

Communication is defined as clearly, concisely, and accurately conveying necessary information when it is needed while avoiding sharing unfounded information/rumors.

Communication also encompasses providing rationale behind messages/decisions; seeking to understand others' views and priorities, adjusting communication styles to audience, and encouraging open and candid dialogue from others.

This is probably Grace's biggest weakness as well as her biggest opportunity for improvement. Most of the comments have all revolved around poor communication and listening skills. If there is one area I really want to emphasize it is that investing time in communication and listening will likely resolve a lot of the issues noted here. Pay attention Think before you react - don't just say yes to requests and don't just say no to other people's recommendations Be clear on instructions and requests - make sure they are understood before moving on Be concise while still providing some context - If the instructions email to the entire team is only one sentence that's never going to be enough context. If you are asking someone to do analysis tell them why. It likely will change the result. MOST OF ALL: Communicate early and often Grace could use some work on taking ownership both of items assigned to her by her seniors before delegating as well as owning up if mistakes are made. This is a quality we highly push on the analyst team. They need a good role model.
